In areas with manual telephone exchanges which have up to ten lines, telephone fees for residential telephones are to be 200 dinars /monthly?/ and 400 dinars for all other subscribers.

In areas with automatic telephone exchanges which have telephone call counters, the monthly charge is to be 200 dinars, with an additional 5 dinars for each telephone call.

Active and retired postal, telegraph, and telephone workers and clerks who are telephone subscribers are to pay 2.5 dinars for the first 200 impulses recorded by the telephone call counter and 5 dinars for each additional impulse. Disabled veterans with 100-percent disability are entitled to 50 percent of this rate.

If a permanent connection is given to a subscriber who has manual telephone service, so that his telephone is connected with an automatic telephone exchange and its subscribers, he is charged the regular fee for his telephone and an additional fee equal to three units of an ordinary long-distance call made during the heavy traffic period between his exchange and the automatic exchange. This fee is charged as often as the subscriber completes a call.

Subscribers' names may be entered in the telephone directory twice without charge, but the fee for third and additional entries is to be 100 dinars each.

The fee for leasing lines for a fixed period of several hours is to equal the fee charged for ten units made during that time. The fee for leasing lines for an entire day is to equal the fee charged for 60 units made during that time.

The fee for installing outside lines between principal and secondary telephones, or secondary stations, is to equal the actual cost of installation.

In a small town rajon, the fee for outside installation of a main telephone in sections which have up to 100 lines is to be 3,000 dinars; in sections which have 101-1,000 lines, 3,500 dinars; and in sections which have more than 1,000 lines, 4,000 dinars.

The fee for the installation of connections for cross-bar telephone lines is to equal the actual cost of installation. If existing lines are utilized for these connections, the fee is to be double the fee charged for outside and inside installations of main telephones. If users of cross-bar telephone lines are connected with main telephones by means of their cross-bar telephone lines, the rate is to be 500 dinars.

The fee for moving a secondary subscriber's telephone is to be 500 dinars; for moving a telephone bell, 250 dinars; for moving a pay telephone, which has to be disconnected to be moved, 250 dinars; for moving a telephone from one room to another, 500 dinars; and for moving a wall connection, 250 dinars.

The fee for moving a main or secondary telephone, secondary station, or double, series, or group connection is to be 500 dinars, except if the move from one place to another is on the same premises, when the fee is to be 250 dinars. The fee for removing or installing telephone equipment at the request of the subscriber is to be 250 dinars.
